4 generations of keeping businesses in motion

For more than 40 years, PPC Corp. has been distributing lubricants and oils that keep cars, commercial fleets, heavy machinery and entire industries running smoothly. PPC Lubricants was incorporated in 2000 as a sister company of PPC Corp. Since then, the company has grown from six employees to 110, and expanded from one facility in Highspire to six facilities covering the entire mid-Atlantic region.

“We are very employee and customer-centric, and I think that’s the reason we’ve grown the business so much in 11 years,” said David Klinger, president. “Our company mantra is that our employees and our customers come first. We continually strive for creative ways to improve and create efficiencies to set ourselves apart from the competition.”

People don’t necessarily think of the lubrication industry as technology-driven, but staying ahead of the market trends is another way that the company stands out from competitors. “This industry tends to be static, and we look at ourselves as very cutting-edge and innovative,” said Klinger.

One of the company’s newest endeavors serves the diesel industry, which struggles to meet emissions and fuel-efficiency guidelines without compromising vehicle performance. Diesel exhaust fluid (DEF) is now available for cars, trucks and tractors, and it lowers the harmful NOx emissions to near-zero. The product helps engines operate more efficiently, which also improves fuel mileage for most vehicles, making it better for the environment and for business. PPC is a master distributor of BlueDEF™ in the mid-Atlantic.

PPC Lubricants also keeps a close tab on changes in local industry. For example, the company has positioned itself to serve all the current and ongoing equipment needs of the natural gas industry in the Marcellus Shale area.

Today, consumers and businesses are focused on maintaining vehicles, commercial fleets and heavy machinery, and PPC Lubricants is a resource. In the automotive service market, PPC helps educate consumers about the value of maintenance programs. In the commercial and industrial markets, PPC performs surveys to monitor inventory and equipment needs, and also analyzes fluids to maximize useful life.

“Some businesses purchase oil and lubrication fluids by price alone,” said Klinger. “But it’s these additional services that PPC offers that are real money savers in the long run.” ■

PPC Lubricants has 40-plus years and four generations worth of experience in distributing the lubricants and oils that keep many industries running. The company is also a master distributor of BlueDEF™ in the mid-Atlantic region.
